Summary

This Briefing Paper explains what ‘directly applicable’ EU law is (mainly EU Treaty obligations and EU regulations), how it applies in the UK, and how many EU regulations are in force. It is one of a series of Library briefings on different elements of the EU acquis and Brexit, and will be updated periodically.

What is ‘directly applicable’ EU law?
Directly applicable EU law does not need further domestic transposition in order to apply in the Member States. It applies as soon as it enters into force (either on the date stipulated in the act or, failing this, on the twentieth day following its publication in the Official Journal of the European Union, L series).

The Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU) states in Article 288 that EU regulations are binding and directly applicable. EU directives are in principle not directly applicable, but they may be so, and EU decisions may be directly applicable on the same basis as directives.

In 1963 the EU Court of Justice established the principle of “direct effect” of EU Treaty obligations, provided they are intended to confer rights on individuals, are precise, clear and unconditional, and do not entail any additional national or European measures (i.e. are directly applicable).

How many EU laws are directly applicable?
According to the EU’s Eur-lex website there are at present nearly 20,000 EU legislative acts in force. These are mainly directives, regulations, decisions and international agreements, but they include a range of other instruments. Of these, around 5,000 EU regulations are directly applicable in all EU Member States.

Directly applicable EU law in the UK
Section 2(1) of the European Communities Act 1972 (ECA) gives the authority for directly applicable EU law to have legal effect in UK law without needing further UK enactment. Sometimes the effects of directly applicable law do need further UK implementation. EU regulations are often implemented in the UK by non-legislative or ‘soft law’ measures such as administrative rules and regulations.

The Great Repeal Bill
As Commons Briefing Paper Legislating for Brexit: the Great Repeal Bill, CBP7793, 21 November 2016, explains, a major issue for Brexit is what to do with the thousands of EU laws that are directly applicable. This is because if there is no specific provision for them, they will no longer apply in the UK as soon as the European Communities Act 1972 is repealed.
According to the Government, the proposed ‘Great Repeal Bill’ will make provision for the EU acquis – the body of existing EU law and obligations - to be “converted” into UK law “wherever practical”. Directly applicable laws will need to be ‘saved’ to ensure that they continue to operate until the Government (and Parliament?) decides what to do with them (which will depend largely on the outcome of the EU-UK withdrawal negotiations and the UK’s future relationship with the EU).
1. EU law in force

According to the EU’s Eur-lex website there are at present nearly 19,000 EU legislative acts in force. These are mainly directives, regulations, decisions and international agreements, but they include other instruments, such as resolutions, reports and special reports, rules of procedure, guidelines, declarations, inter-institutional and internal agreements, Memorandums of Understanding, programmes, opinions, communications, information, conclusions and statutes.

The Lisbon Treaty introduced a hierarchy in EU secondary legislation by distinguishing in Articles 289, 290 and 291 of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU) between legislative acts, delegated acts and implementing acts. Legislative acts are legal acts which are adopted through the Ordinary Legislative Procedure or a special legislative procedure. They include EU directives, regulations and decisions.

The table below shows the number of EU directives, regulations, decisions and international agreements (or similar) in force in 20 subject categories. It excludes delegated and implementing laws and other instruments mentioned above. The data has been compiled from the Eur-Lex Directory of EU legislation in force (on 4 January 2017). It excludes delegated and implementing laws (around 2,100) and other instruments mentioned above. It should also be noted that some regulations might be counted in more than one policy area.

4 In foreign, security and defence policies the intergovernmental method still applies. The Lisbon Treaty replaced common strategies, joint actions and common positions by general guidelines, decisions defining “actions to be undertaken by the Union”, “positions to be taken by the Union”, and arrangements for the implementation of those decisions (Article 25 TEU).

5 The UK has opt-in and opt-out arrangements in relation to the AFSJ.
2. Directly applicable EU law

2.1 Introduction

A major issue for Brexit is what to do with the thousands of EU laws that are directly applicable in the UK. If there is no specific provision for them, they will no longer apply in the UK as soon as the European Communities Act 1972 is repealed. The Government has said it intends to “convert” EU laws into UK law “wherever practical”, so they can continue to operate in the UK until the Government and Parliament decide what to do with them.

But what are ‘directly applicable’ EU laws? Several different types of EU law are directly applicable: EU Treaty provisions, EU regulations and EU decisions. These are addressed in turn below.

‘Directly applicable’ means that the EU law applies in the Member States without further national implementing measures, as soon as it enters into force (either on the date stipulated in the act or, failing this, on the twentieth day following its publication in the Official Journal of the European Union).

Directly applicable laws usually also have ‘direct effect’. This means that they automatically create rights which individuals can rely on before national courts. In the Van Gend & Loos judgment on 5 February 1963, the Court of Justice of the EU (CJEU) established the principle of ‘direct effect’ and rights for individuals.

To have direct effect, an EU obligation must:

• be intended to confer rights on individuals;
• be precise, clear and unconditional; and
• not entail any additional national or European measures.

But some Treaty provisions are expressed in general terms and cannot be applied directly by national courts.

There is a distinction in direct effect between ‘Vertical Direct Effect’, which means the provision has effect between the citizen and the State, and ‘Horizontal Direct Effect’, which means the provision has effect between citizens.

The CJEU has extended the principle of direct effect to Treaty Articles, directives and decisions, and even to provisions in the EU’s external agreements, if certain criteria are met.

7 In practice directly applicable laws sometimes do need further domestic enactment.
8 Although direct applicability is not a necessary pre-condition for direct effect.
9 The judgment established that former Article 12 of the EEC Treaty (now Article 30 TFEU) was directly effective, as it was a means of ensuring uniform application in all Member States.
Directly applicable EU laws pose a particular problem for Brexit: there are a great many of them, they may be difficult to identify and therefore to ‘disentangle’, and many are not laws at all in the UK, but administrative rules or other ‘soft law’ measures.

2.2 The EU Treaties

EU Treaty Articles may be directly applicable. For example, Article 157 TFEU (ex Article 141 TEC and originally Article 119 TEC) provides that “Each Member State shall ensure that the principle of equal pay for male and female workers for equal work or work of equal value is applied”. The EU Court of Justice established in Defrenne in 1976 that this Article was “directly applicable and may thus give rise to individual rights which the courts must protect”.10 In Barber in 1990 the EU Court ruled: “Article 119 of the Treaty applies directly to all forms of discrimination which may be identified solely with the aid of the criteria of equal work and equal pay referred to by that provision, without national or Community measures being required to define them with greater precision”.11

2.3 EU regulations

Article 288 TFEU defines an EU regulation as having “general application”, “binding in its entirety and directly applicable in all Member States”. A regulation’s “legal effects are simultaneously, automatically and uniformly binding in all the national legislations”.12

So regulations are intended to apply directly in all Member States, without the need for further national implementing measures. However, it might be necessary to amend existing national provisions that are inconsistent with regulations. Sometimes further measures have been needed in the UK to implement an EU Regulation; for example, the Open Internet Access (EU Regulation) Regulations 2016 implemented EU Regulation 2015/2120 of 25 November 2015 concerning mobile roaming in the EU.

Regulations are also intended to come into effect without further action in the devolved nations and Gibraltar. But here too further implementation may be necessary. For example, three EU regulations on tachographs were implemented in Gibraltar by the Tachographs (Miscellaneous Provisions) Regulations 2015.

Commission and Council regulations

There are Commission regulations and Council or European Parliament and Council regulations. In the list of EU regulations in force in the

12 Eur-Lex, European Union regulations.
Appendix, there are 3,556 Commission regulations and 1,850 Council or EP/Council regulations.

Although regulations are “legal acts of the Union”, in practice there are both legislative regulations and quasi- or non-legislative ones – the latter are the largest group and are almost always Commission regulations. Article 288 TFEU does not clearly distinguish between legislative acts and administrative acts. Neill Nugent summarises some general characteristics of the two types:

While there is no hard and fast distinction between EP and Council, Council and Commission legislation, the first two tend to be broader in scope, to be concerned with more important matters, and to be aimed at laying down a legal framework in a policy sphere. Commission legislation – of which in terms of volume there is much more than EP and Council and Council-only legislation - is largely of an implementing, administrative, and technical nature and is usually subject to tight guidelines laid down in enabling EP and Council or Council legislation.13

Commission regulations often translate “policy principles into detailed, and often highly technical, rules on such matters as product standards, health and safety conditions, inspection rules, authorizations for marketed products and practices, and import duties”14. Professor Michael Dougan of Liverpool University summarises the kind of technical details that are typically the subject of these regulations:

> [non-legislative regulations] are adopted in much larger numbers, because they constitute one of the main legal instruments through which the EU institutions reach their detailed technical administrative decisions: e.g. updating the scientific registers of chemicals and food additives; calculating the precise allocation of import licences under the common commercial policy; adjusting specific anti-dumping duties on cheap imports from third countries; confirming the regular continuance of UN sanctions on particular third countries or named individuals suspected of involvement in terrorism; entering or updating specific foodstuffs in the register of protected designations of origin etc.15

Many regulations are made following the adoption of a basic EU law containing information which needs updating on a regular basis. For example, many regulations implement the EU’s Combined Nomenclature (CN). When goods are declared to customs in the EU, they are classified according to the CN. Imported and exported goods must be declared, stating under which subheading of the CN they fall. This determines which rate of customs duty applies and how the goods are treated for statistical purposes.16 The basic CN regulation is Council Regulation (EEC) No 2658/87 on the tariff and statistical nomenclature

16 See European Commission, Taxation and Customs Union for further information on the CN.
and on the Common Customs Tariff. An updated version of an Annex to the CN Regulation is published as a Commission Regulation every year in the EU Official Journal.

2.4 Delegated and implementing regulations

Delegated and implementing regulations are also directly applicable in all EU Member States. According to Eur-Lex data, there are currently 243 delegated regulations and 1,929 implementing regulations. These acts are not included in the list of regulations in force, but the regulations which they clarify or implement are listed.

Delegated acts

Article 290 TFEU allows the EU Council or Council and EP to delegate to the Commission “the power to adopt non-legislative acts of general application to supplement or amend certain non-essential elements of the legislative act”. There are conditions attached to this power:

- the essential elements of a policy area may not be subject to a delegation of power.
- the objectives, content, scope and duration of the delegation of power must be defined in the legislative acts.
- the legislator must explicitly set out in the legislative act the conditions under which the delegation may be exercised, and may provide a right to revoke the delegation or to express objections to the delegated act.

Delegated acts may add new (non-essential) rules or involve a subsequent amendment to elements of a legislative act. For example, Commission delegated regulation 2015/2401 on the content and functioning of the Register of European political parties and foundations fulfils requirements of a 2014 Council and EP Regulation 1141/2014 “on the statute and funding of European political parties and European political foundations”. Article 7(2) of that regulation provided the Commission with powers to adopt delegated acts “in order to ensure the proper functioning of the Register” with regard to “the information and supporting documents held by the Authority for which the Register is to be the competent repository”. The delegated regulation contains a list of the documentation and information required for the register.

Delegated acts are used widely in the areas of the internal market, agriculture, the environment, consumer protection, transport, and the Area of Freedom, Security and Justice.

Implementing acts

Under Article 291 TFEU, where uniform conditions are required for the implementation of EU measures, the Commission can adopt implementing acts. A 2011 Council/EP regulation lays down rules and 12 Legislating for Brexit: directly applicable EU law

general principles concerning the Member States’ control of the Commission’s exercise of implementing powers.

There are 615 implementing regulations in the area of the Environment, Consumers and Health Protection. For example, a Commission implementing regulation (2016/2104 of 21 November 2016) enters Vale of Evesham Asparagus in the EU’s register of protected designations of origin and protected geographical indications.

Sometimes the Council also has this power under Articles 24 and 26 TEU (Common Foreign and Security Policy) to “take the decisions necessary for defining and implementing it on the basis of the general guidelines and strategic lines defined by the European Council”.

2.5 EU decisions

Under Article 288 TFEU an EU decision is binding on those to whom it is addressed and may be directly applicable. According to Eur-lex there are over 7,000 EU Decisions.19

EU decisions are bespoke and often do require further implementation in the UK. For example, Commission Decision 2009/431 of 29 May 2009 granting a derogation requested by the UK with regard to England, Scotland and Wales “pursuant to Council Directive 91/676/EEC concerning the protection of waters against pollution caused by nitrates from agricultural sources” was implemented by SI 2009/3160, Nitrate Pollution Prevention (Amendment) Regulations and subsequent amendments.

Decisions are usually specific measures addressed to a particular Member State, company20 or individual(s). They are adopted in a whole range of circumstances, for example:

- to enforce competition policy
- to institute a pilot action programme
- to authorise grants from one of the EU’s funds
- to allow an exemption from an existing measure
- to counter dumping from a third country.21

On the basis of European Court of Justice case law, decisions may have direct effect.22 Eur-Lex states that decisions “may have direct effect when they refer to an EU country as the addressee. The Court of Justice therefore recognises only a direct vertical effect”.23

20 The Europa website gives by way of example a Commission decision on fining software giant Microsoft for abusing its dominant market position, where the decision applied to Microsoft only.
22 For example, see Case 9/70, Franz Grad.
23 See judgment in Case C-156/91, 10 November 1992, Hansa Fleisch.
3. Directly applicable EU law in the UK

3.1 The European Communities Act 1972

Section 2(1) of the European Communities Act 1972 (ECA) gives the authority for ‘directly applicable’ EU law, such as regulations, to automatically have legal effect in UK law without needing further enactment. EU regulations thus become law automatically in all four UK nations (and in the Crown Dependencies and Gibraltar to the extent that the Treaties apply). As EU regulations must be the same across all Member States, they supersede any existing law which is inconsistent with them, and any of the UK legislatures may have to amend their laws on occasions to comply with them.

Section 2(1) provides:

All such rights, powers, liabilities, obligations and restrictions from time to time created or arising by or under the Treaties, and all such remedies and procedures from time to time provided for by or under the Treaties, as in accordance with the Treaties are without further enactment to be given legal effect or used in the United Kingdom shall be recognised and available in law, and be enforced, allowed and followed accordingly; and the expression “enforceable EU right” and similar expressions shall be read as referring to one to which this sub-section applies.

The European Scrutiny Committee report on the 2010-11 EU Bill and Parliamentary Sovereignty outlined the constitutional importance of Section 2(1):

Section 2(1) applies to EU law now and as it develops in the future “from time to time” either by Treaty revision “created by” or interpretation by the Court of Justice of the EU “arising under”. So, when an EU Regulation enters into force, it automatically becomes part of national law, as it does in the other 26 Member States on the same day. The uniqueness of section 2(1) is that it gives effect to directly applicable or effective EU law without the need each time for implementing legislation, as would usually be required for the incorporation of other obligations assumed under international law by a dualist State. The domestic courts are obliged to give full effect to section 2(1), in the light of the case law of the Court of Justice (section 3(1)).

Although regulations are directly applicable, many do require additional national provisions in relation to their effects, procedure or enforcement. For example, the EU Trade Mark Regulation (as amended) was implemented in the UK by SI 2016 No. 299, the European Union Trade Mark Regulations 2016.

Many regulations are implemented in the UK by non-legislative administrative rules, regulations, departmental notes and documents, or guidelines on procedures. For example, Regulation 2092/91, the basis for UK organic standards, is implemented under the Organic Products Regulations 2004 and subsequent SIs, through the Compendium of UK Organic Standards.

Many regulations also apply via existing national provisions.

EU regulations may have little or no relevance for the UK – for example, olive and tobacco growing regulations are unlikely to have much impact here – but the UK must nevertheless adhere to such regulations along with olive and tobacco growing States.

3.2 Brexit and EU regulations

As Commons Briefing Paper Legislating for Brexit: the Great Repeal Bill, CBP7793, 21 November 2016, explains, a major issue for Brexit is what to do with the thousands of EU laws that are directly applicable. If the ECA is repealed without making provision for directly applicable EU laws, they will no longer apply in the UK. This is because if there is no specific provision for them, they will no longer apply in the UK as soon as the European Communities Act 1972 is repealed.

The Government intends that the Great Repeal Bill will provide for their continuance, pending UK decisions on what to do about them. So it is envisaged that the Great Repeal Bill will “convert” directly applicable EU laws into UK law with effect from Brexit day, allowing for their retention, repeal or amendment after Brexit. What the Government and Parliament do with them will depend largely on the outcome of the EU-UK withdrawal negotiations and the UK’s future relationship with the EU.

But as analysts have pointed out, identifying, reviewing and amending the body of directly applicable EU law will be “a civil service legal exercise on a scale that has not been encountered at any other time in our recent legal history”.

4. Appendix EU regulations in force

This section lists EU regulations in force in December 2016 under 20 subject categories used in the Eur-lex Directory of EU legislation. Included in the list are the latest consolidated versions of regulations. These provide amendments and corrigenda to the regulations, but they are not legal texts (which are only in the Official Journal of the EU) and they may not be up-to-date.

In the Area of Freedom, Security and Justice (section 3.19, below), the UK has an opt-in arrangement in Justice and Home Affairs matters (Title V) and an opt-out from the Schengen rules. Those regulations in which the UK participates are listed in that section.
